

The Health Sciences and Human Services Library of the University of Maryland, Baltimore appreciates receiving book donations. Gift books often supply the Library with additional copies of heavily used resources or replacement copies of damaged or missing items. They are also a source for historically significant or rare works. Please see the Historical Collections Gift Policy for additional information on gifts to the Historical Collections.

Of particular value are works published within the past five years in the health sciences and human services, in good physical condition, and without excessive marking. The Library reserves the right to add to our collections only those items that meet our current needs. Gifts not added to our collection will be donated to other libraries or agencies, sold, or discarded at the Library's discretion.

Donors are asked to bring gifts to the Library. Donations of ten or fewer books may be left at the Information Services desk. Please call ahead to make arrangements for large book or journal donations.

The Library can provide a letter acknowledging your gift for tax purposes. We are unable, however, to value your donation. An itemized list or appraisal of items should be prepared before you bring your gift to the Library.
